Summary

Models of intercultural competence

Elvi Piršl
University of Juraj Dobrila Pula, Croatia
Department of Studies in Italian

The sharp rise in the large number of intercultural models began more than two decades in the social sciences, especially in their disciplines such as management, health care, counseling, social work, psychology and education. Inter-cultural models can help teachers, teachers, educators, and all other persons who are directly or indirectly involved in working with people of a different cultural background. The aim of this paper is to present the most important models of intercultural competence, and problem definition of the concept of intercultural competence and its components, because depending on its definition largely depends on the interpretation of intercultural models and their essential dimensions.

Keywords: intercultural models, models of intercultural competence, interaction, development, Component, conceptual, contextual, communication models.