SAŽETAK: Devedesete su godine u Hrvatskoj period sveopćeg opravljanja od ratne traume, ali i vrlo akutnih problema na svim društveno-političkim razinama. Period je to (re)formiranja likovne scene, konstruiranja identiteta nove mlade generacije aktera likovne scene, legitimiziranja umjetničkog stvaralaštva proteklih generacija uspostavljanjem paralela između nove generacije i njihovih prethodnika, ali i period opstiriranja slobode izražavanja i kritičkog mišljenja. Za iduće desetljeće izrazito važnu ulogu imat će formiranje tzv. „nezavisne“ scene, tj. angažiranih umjetničkih praksi.

KLJUČNE RIJEČI: devedesete, identitet hrvatske likovne scene, međugeneracijski kontinuitet, nezavisna scena, javno, sloboda izražavanja.

Posljednje je desetljeće 20. stoljeća na prostoru Hrvatske obilježeno nizom političkih, društvenih i kulturnih turbulencija, problema i stanja. Pisati tekst čija je namjera sintetizirati i ocrati ključne odrednice i događaje devedesetih nije nimalo lako. Godine koje su tema ovog broja još su uvijek dio svježe prošlosti i osobno proživljenog iskustva, dok nam s druge strane proteklo desetljeće, koje nas dijeli od devedesetih, pruža dovoljno vremensko (ponekad i emotivno) distanciranje. Ako u korpusu događaja trebamo posegnuti za samo jednim koji je odredio početak desetljeća (a i njegov daljnji tijek), onda je to nužno raspad socijalističke Jugoslavije, osnutak nove samostalne hrvatske države i, naravno, Domovinski rat. Uspostavom nove države, s novim, demokratskim uređenjem, dolazi do promjena ne samo na političkoj razini i na razini uređivanja i uspostavljanja novih političko-društvenih odnosa, nego i u mikroferama manjih sustava unutar područja kulture, dakle i likovne produkcije.

Ipak, te promjene pri svojoj realizaciji nisu doprinijele razvoju i ekspanziji civilnog društva, prosperitetu nove države ili uključivanju Hrvatske u sustav šire europske scene (na koji god način – tržišni, privredni, gospodarski, kulturni); naprotiv, cijelo je desetljeće obilježeno naporom dijela javnosti i kulturno-umjetničke scene da se jedna uglavnom mučna i teška politička i društvena situacija – promjeni.

Izlazak iz SFRJ označio je velike promjene, i pozitivne i negativne, čije su se posljedice osjetile na svim poljima. Osim vrlo osjetljive poratne situacije, u kojoj je ratna trauma rezultirala vrlo kompleksnim odnosom prema socijalističkoj prošlosti, događa se i nagli zaokret u odnosu prema europskim državama te ulazak u tranzicijski proces i usmjeravanje državne strukture k sustavu tržišnog gospodarstva. To je označilo ulazak Hrvatske u veliku i dugotrajanu gospodarsku krizu, dok je istovremeno monopol tadašnje desno orientirane konzervativne vlasti stvorio uvjete za krizu demokracije. Represija, politička manipulacija, različiti oblici nedemokratičnosti te zatiranja ljudskih prava i slobode govora, korupcija, pa čak i elementi monopolističkih i autarhičnih principa

In Croatia, the last decade of the 20th century was marked by a series of political, social, and cultural turbulences, problems, and conditions. Making an attempt at synthesizing and outlining the determining phenomena and events of the 1990s is by no means easy, especially if your memories of the period are related primarily to pre-school and primary-school experiences. The years that are the theme of this issue of Život umjetnosti are still felt as part of the recent past and personal experience; and yet, the decade that divides us from the 1990s offers considerable temporal (and sometimes emotional) distance. If we wanted to isolate a single string of events that determined the beginning of the decade (as well as its further development), then it would certainly be the fall of socialist Yugoslavia, the foundation of an independent Croatian state, and, of course, the Liberation War. Establishing a new state with a new, democratic system meant introducing lots of changes (at least nominally), not only at the level of politics or the new social and political arrangements – including the new and increasing waves of intrusion of foreign capital to the Croatian market, as well as its new orientation towards European and global integrations – but also in the micro-spheres of smaller systems in the field of culture, including the artistic production. Nevertheless, these changes hardly contributed to the development and expansion of the civil society, or the prosperity of the new state, and they did not help introduce Croatia into the European system at large

(in whichever way – commercial, economic, or cultural); on the contrary, the entire decade was marked by the efforts of a part of the general public on the one hand, and the cultural and artistic scene on the other, to deal with a largely cumbersome and difficult political and social situation – and to change it.

Leaving the socialist Yugoslavia brought a huge change, with consequences that were felt in all spheres of life. Besides the extremely sensitive post-war situation, in which the trauma of war resulted in a very complex attitude towards the socialist past, there was a sharp turn in the relations with the Western European countries, which accompanied the process of social transition and guided the state structures towards the system of market economy. These processes ushered Croatia into a massive and protracted economic crisis, while at the same time the monopoly of the then rightist conservative government created the conditions for a crisis of democracy. Repression, political manipulation, various forms of violation of democracy and human rights, suppression of the freedom of speech, corruption and even elements of monopolistic and autarchic principles of state power, subjection of all mass media (state television, radio, and daily press) to the profit hunger of the official state leadership – are only some of the labels that we can apply to describe the atmosphere of the 1990s. The cultural scene, including that of the visual arts, which had only just emerged and was trying to assert itself in those exceptionally u državnoj vlasti, podređivanje javnih medija (državne televizije, radija, dnevne tiska) koristoljublju službenog državnog vrha – samo su neke od sintagmi koje možemo upotrijebiti za opisivanje klime devedesetih. Kulturna ili, uže, likovno-umjetnička scena, koja se tek formirala i pokušavala afirmirati u tim izrazito nepovoljnim uvjetima, prve jasnije obriše vlastite infrastrukture dobiva tek krajem desetljeća; dotad sputana raznim ograničenjima, koja su rezultirala smanjenom umjetničkom produkcijom i zakržljalim muješko-galerijskim sustavom, nepostojanjem adekvatne muješke institucije i prostora, kao i sustavne likovne kritike, ta je scena funkcionalira više na individualnoj razini te angažmanu i (dobroj) volji pojedinih kustosa i umjetnika. Tek zahvaljujući upornom djelovanju i naporu, primjerice, umjetnika Slavena Tolja, Art radionica Lazareti u Dubrovniku, čiji je on voditelj od 1988., kontinuirano djeluje do danas. Kroz Lazarete i Galeriju Otok, pa i kroz kasnije osnovan Festival scenskih umjetnosti Karantena, u nizu je godina prošao velik broj domaćih i stranih umjetnika i nesumnjiv je njihov doprinos definiranju i razvoju scene, ne samo na lokalnom dubrovačkom području, nego i na širem planu.

Zatvaranje pak Galerije Proširenih medija u Zagrebu na samom početku desetljeća zbog ratnih (ne)prilika stvorilo je iskonsku rupu – tek jednu u nizu – u umjetničko-prezentacijskoj infrastrukturi grada, i to upravo za onaj dio umjetničke produkcije koji je i inače teže pronalazio puteve recepcije: naime, za one umjetnike čije stvaralaštvo obuhvaća različite medije i forme, uglavnom vrlo udaljene od tradicionalnih. Godine 1994. Galerija PM ponovno je otvorena uz Izložbu jela i pića, ironičnu problematizaciju aktualnog trenutka i teških uvjeta djelovanja i rada likovnih umjetnika kroz format izložbe.²

Kao simptomatičan primjer situacije ranih devedesetih može se predočiti slučaj izlaganja rada Antuna Maračića u prostorima dubrovačkog ogranka Matrice hrvatske, na poziv Slavena Tolja. Rad koji je Maračić zamislio, ostvario i izložio još 1991. na izložbi Sloboda je manifestacija vrhunske neljudskosti, a dopunio i razradio za izložbu 1994., sastoji se od niza grafika/kolaža koji prikazuju prometne znakove na crnom papiru. Umjesto simbola iz sfere prometne komunikacije, na znakovima su fotografije različitih dubrovačkih kulturnih vrijednosti – od povijesnih crkava, pojedinih spomenika, pa do samoga grada, a napisjetku i ljudi – i ispod njih na cirilici ispisani tekst „Opasnost!!! Bog“, „Opasnost!!! Lepota“, „Opasnost!!! istorija“, „Opasnost!!! grad“, „Opasnost!!! Mrtvi“. Teško je ne primijetiti ili čak „promašiti“ antiratnu poruku rada. Radi se ovdje „o oznakama u zamišljenu inertnom psihološkom prometu nositelja konkretnoga pisma i jezika, realizirana destruktora svega navedenoga. Najafirmativnije humanističke kategorije, reprezentanti različitih aspekata Života (vjera, kultura, obitelj...) za njih su izvori dubokog straha i izazivaju obranu uništenjem. unfavourable conditions, acquired the first clearer contours of its infrastructure only towards the end of the decade; until then it was thwarted by various limitations, which resulted in a reduced artistic production and a stunted systems of museums and galleries, as well as the lack of adequate museum institutions and venues, or systematic art criticism, so that the scene functioned largely on the level of individuals and owing to the engagement (and good will) of certain curators and artists. Thus it was only owing to the persistent work and efforts of artist Slaven Tolj that Art Workshop Lazareti in Dubrovnik, whose manager he has been since 1988, remained in continuous operation until the present day. A large number of Croatian and international artists presented their work at Lazareti and Otok Gallery, as well as the later established Festival of Performing Arts Karantena, and these venues undoubtedly contributed to the scene's definition and evolution, not only locally, in the region of Dubrovnik, but also on a larger scale. Contrary to that, closing down the Gallery of Extended Media in Zagreb early in that decade, with the explanation of (unfavourable) wartime circumstances, created an elemental hole – one among many – in the city's infrastructure in terms of art presentation, affecting precisely that segment of artistic production which had always had problems with finding paths of reception: namely, those artists whose work included various media and forms, mostly very distant from the traditional ones. In 1994, the Gallery was reopened with the Exhibition of Food and Drink, an ironic commentary on the current situation in the exhibition format, which discussed the difficult working conditions of the visual artists.²

A symptomatic example of the situation in the early 1990s was Antun Maračić's exhibition at the Dubrovnik branch of Matica Hrvatska, which took place at the invitation of Slaven Tolj. The exhibited artwork, which Maračić had conceived, produced, and presented back in 1991 at the exhibition called Freedom is a Manifestation of Ultimate Inhumanity, and then enlarged and developed it for the exhibition in 1994, consisted of a series of prints/collages showing traffic signs on black paper. Instead of symbols used in traffic communication, the signs contained photographs of various cultural assets of Dubrovnik – historical churches, individual monuments, and even the city itself with its people – below which one could read inscriptions in Cyrillic script such as “Danger!!! God,” “Danger!!! Beauty,” “Danger!!! History,” “Danger!!! City,” or “Danger!!! Dead people.” It would be difficult to ignore or even “misread” the anti-war message of this artwork. It contained “signs in an imaginary, inert mental traffic of the users of this particular script and language, the accomplished destructors of all that. For them, the most affirmative humane categories, representing various aspects of Life (such as religion, culture, or family) are a source of deep fears, provoking defence by destruction. For that collective corpse in a living body, life in all its manifestations presents a threat, since it reveals its own human non-existence. Destroying life, item by svim svojim manifestacijama predstavlja opasnost, jer razotkriva njegovo ljudsko nepostojanje. Uništenje života, stavku po stavku, znači uspostavljanje globalnog pejsaža smrти, ambijenta koji je prisna slika i prilika mrtve duše autora destrukcije.¹³ Ipak, nakon tri dana trajanja (od kojih su dva bila neradna), izložba je naprasno zatvorena zbog, kako je autoru (Maračiću) i organizatoru (Tolju) pojašnjeno, neprilične upotrebe cirilice. Sam čin zatvaranja izložbe i nepriznavanja prava na izražavanje unutar javnog dijursa krajnje je drastičan i totalistički akt koji svjedoči o represivnosti tada aktualnog javnog i političkog sustava.

Međutim, da i u takvim uvjetima postoji ambicija i načini kojima se može pokušati (re)formirati scena i aktualizirati pitanje postojanja svremene likovne produkcije dokazuje pojava skupine EgoEast, i to već na samom početku devedesetih. Grupa mladih umjetnika na čelu s Aleksandrom Battistom Ilićem, Ivanom Keser, Željkom Božičevićem, Ivicom Franićem i Davorom Pavelićem, tek izašlih iz nekolicine tradicionalistički organiziranih klasa Akademije likovnih umjetnosti u Zagrebu, nastojala je nadići manjkavosti obrazovnog sustava, s jedne strane, i umjetničke scene, odnosno njezine nekoherentnosti, s druge. Na XXIII. Salonu mladih 1992. godine umjetnici iz EgoEasta bili su autorima nešto izmijenjene koncepcije Salona; te se godine uz standardnu redovnu reviju izložbu radova pristiglih na natječaj održala i zasebna izložba, čiji su autori bili umjetnici EgoEasta, u Umjetničkom paviljonu. Izložba – koja item, means establishing a global landscape of death, an ambience that is an intimate image and replica of the dead soul of the authors of destruction.”¹³ However, the exhibition was abruptly closed after only three days (of which two were holidays), with the explanation offered to the artist (Maračić) and the organizer (Tolj) that it used the Cyrillic script in an inappropriate way. The very act of closing the exhibition and the denial of the right to expression within public discourse was an extremely drastic and totalitarian act, which testified of the repressive nature of the current public and political system. On the other hand, the emergence of EgoEast in the very beginning of the 1990s proves that even in such circumstances there was both the desire and the ways for trying to (re-)form the scene and to deal with the issue of the existence of a contemporary artistic production. This group of young artists, led by Aleksandar Battista Ilić, Ivana Keser, Željko Božičević, Ivica Franić, and Davor Pavelić, who had recently come out of the few traditionally organized classes of the Academy of Fine Arts in Zagreb, sought to overcome the exigencies of the educational system on the one hand, and the faults and incoherence of the art scene on the other. At the 23rd Youth Salon of 1992, artists from EgoEast designed the event in a somewhat altered form; that year, along with the standard revue of competition artworks, there was an additional exhibition of artists participating in EgoEast, which took place at Art Pavilion in Zagreb. The exhibition – which stood out as a sort of programmatic statement, supported by stoji kao svojevrstan programatski iskaz potkrnjepljena katalogom i manifestnim tekstom Ivane Keser⁴ – okupila je nekoliko generacija hrvatskih likovnih umjetnika i pružila prvi oblik historiografije perioda od četrdesetak godina unatrag. Izložbom je i po prvi put uspostavljen kontinuitet starijih i mlađih generacija umjetnika, u prvom redu upućeno je na postojanje tradicije konceptualnih oblika prakse – od Gorgone, Nove umjetničke prakse pa do djelovanja sasvim nove, tek stasajuće generacije, ali i na još raniju tradiciju osnivanja umjetničkih grupa, različitih oblika udruženog djelovanja i samoorganiziranja umjetnika. Već u samom nazivu grupe – koji vrlo spretno sjedinjuje riječi „ja“ i „istok“ u treću, koja čitanjem ustanavljuje treći značenjski sloj: „egoist“ – sadržane su dvije osnovne namjere i dva cilja njihova djelovanja. Prvo, EgoEast nastoji istražiti i okupiti umjetnike s tzv. „Istoka“ (Europe), dakle čitavog onog područja istočno od nedavno srušenog Berlinskog zida. Drugo, kao tada najmlada generacija likovnih umjetnika, EgoEast nastoji stvoriti „svoje mjesto pod suncem“, i to povezivanjem (i stvarnim, fizičkim – budući da su redovno posjećivali pojedine umjetnike, svojevrsne „pretke“ – ali i ideološkim) s generacijskim prethodnicima i uspostavljanjem kontinuiteta sličnosti. Zanimljivo je da je prvi „institucionalizirani“ pregled suvremene umjetnosti i aktualnih umjetničkih i likovnih strujanja na sceni uslijedio tek nakon ovog EgoEasta. Krajem iduće 1993. godine, naime, otvara se opsežna izložba Nova hrvatska umjetnost u prostorima Moderne galerije, Umjetničkog paviljona i Salona galerije Karas. Autori, povjesničari umjetnosti Igor Zidić, ravnatelj Moderne galerije, Zdenko Rus i Mladenka Šolman, okupili su 300-tinjak djela nastalih uglavnom u prethodnih pet godina i ukupno 112 autora, uključivši sve medije likovnog stvaralaštva i inzistirajući na praćenju pluralističke prirode likovne scene. I premda su ambicioznost izložbe, kao i njezin cilj da „stvori prvu carte d'identité hrvatske nove umjetnosti“⁵ neupitni, ona je ipak na posredan način bila simptom krnje izložbene politike hrvatskih i gradskih upravnih institucija, problema neadekvatnog financiranja kulturnih programa⁶ i – napisljeku – nepoštojanja prikladne prostorne i institucionalne strukture za izlaganje i produciranje suvremene umjetnosti.⁷ Te je probleme djelomično olakšalo osnivanje Soros centra za suvremenu umjetnost (SCCA), koji od 1993. djeluje u Hrvatskoj kao dio Instituta Otvorenog društva, i otad nastoji sruštavno promicati i poticati suvremenu likovnu produkciju – bilo finansijski, bilo logistički i organizacijski.⁸ Uz to, SCCA-ov doprinos na području dokumentiranja hrvatske suvremene umjetnosti je pozamašan. Godišnje izložbe⁹ u organizaciji Instituta okupile su bitnije protagonisti umjetničke scene sedamdesetih i njihovih nasljedovatelja u devedesetima, što je na neki način imalo kulminaciju u retrospektivnoj izložbi a catalogue and a manifesto written by Ivana Keser⁴ – presented several generations of Croatian artists and offered a first version of art historiography for the previous four decades. Thus, it was the first to establish a continuity between the older and the younger generations of artists, and it drew attention to the existence of a tradition of conceptual art – from Gorgona and New Art Practice to the activity of a completely new generation that was just emerging, as well as the earlier tradition of founding art groups, collaborative work, and artistic self-organization. The very name of EgoEast – which cleverly combined the words “ego” and “east” into the word “egoist”, thus establishing a third layer of meaning – implied the two basic intentions and goals of their activity. Firstly, EgoEast sought to explore and gather the artworks and artists of the so-called “East” (of Europe), the entire region east of the recently fallen Berlin Wall. Secondly, as the then youngest generation of artists, EgoEast sought to create “their own place under the sun” by establishing a connection (both actual and physical, since they often visited individual artists, their “predecessors” of a sort, and ideological one) with the previous generations, and by insisting on continuity through similarity. It is interesting that the first “institutionalized” overview of contemporary art and the current artistic trends on the Croatian scene followed only after that of EgoEast. Late in 1993, an extensive exhibition called New Croatian Art was opened at Modern Gallery, Art Pavilion, and the Salon of Karas Gallery in Zagreb. Its authors were art historians Igor Zidić (director of Modern Gallery), Zdenko Rus, and Mladenka Šolman, and it included some 300 artworks, created mostly within the previous five years by 112 different artists, including all the media of visual arts and insisting on paying justice to the pluralist nature of the art scene. And even though its ambitious concept and its goal of “creating the first carte d'identité of new Croatian art”⁵ remain unquestionable, it was nevertheless a symptom of the deficient exhibition policy of the Croatian state and the municipal administrative institutions, the inadequate financing of cultural programmes,⁶ and – eventually – the lack of adequate spatial and institutional structures for exhibiting and producing contemporary art.⁷ These problems were partly alleviated with the establishment of the Soros Center for Contemporary Art (SCCA), which operated in Croatia from 1993 as a part of the Open Society Institute, seeking to systematically promote and encourage contemporary literary production – be it financially, logically, or organizationally.⁸ SCCA's contribution to the field of documenting Croatian contemporary art has been considerable. Annual exhibitions⁹ organized by the Institute summoned some of the crucial protagonists of the art scene of the 1970s and their heirs in the 1990s, reaching a sort of pinnacle with the retrospective exhibition of the Group of Six Authors in 1998, which articulated the Group's position in the 1970s and actualized their role in shaping the neo-conceptual scene in the 1990s.

The turn that gradually occurred in the second half of the 1990s,

Grupe šestorice autora 1998. godine, koja je artikulirala poziciju Grupe u sedamdesetima i aktualizirala njihov udio u formiranju neokonceptualne scene u devedesetim.

Zaokret koji se postupno dogodio u drugoj polovici devedesetih, i koji je rezultirao proširivanjem polja za artikulaciju građanskih prava i slobode govora, a temeljnu potvrdu ostvario u izbornoj smjeni vlasti 2000., svoja je ishodišta imao već u pojedinačnim angažiranjima inicijativama iz područja kulturnog djelovanja, kao što je kazališna skupina Montažstroj,¹⁰ posvećena propitivanju većine aktualnih društvenih problematika, nacionalnog identiteta i identiteta suvremenog čovjeka, „mitologijama Istočne Europe i tranzicije“¹¹ i sl., ili pak časopis Arkzin, pokrenut u okviru Antiratne kampanje Hrvatske 1991. godine, i programatski usmjeren k temama kao što su ljudska prava i prava manjinskih grupa, važnost postojanja alternativne scene, utjecaj i uloga medija i dizajna, kritika aktualne političke situacije i sl. Premda je uvijek gajio status izdanka prave off-scene,¹² uloga ljudi okupljenih oko Arkzina dugoročno je sasvim sigurno doprinijela osnutku i razvoju nekolicine nevladinih organizacija i inicijativa u posljednjoj trećini desetljeća (i kasnije).¹³ Arkzin prestaje izlaziti upravo u to vrijeme, kada je njegova simbolička uloga u pripremanju diskursa, stvaranju teorijskog i praktičnog modela za buduću alternativnu scenu na neki način bila ispunjena. resulting in an extended field of articulating civic rights and the freedom of speech, which obtained its final affirmation in the change of government at the elections of 2000, had its starting points in the more strongly engaged individual initiatives in various fields of cultural activity, such as that of Montažstroj theatre company,¹⁰ dedicated to the exploration of a number of social issues, national identity and the identity of the contemporary man, “myths of Eastern Europe and the transition,” and so on.¹¹ There was also the Arkzin magazine, launched together with the Croatian Anti-War Campaign of 1991, and programmatically oriented towards topics such as human and minority rights, the importance of alternative scenes, the influence and role of design and the media, the critique of current political situation, and so on. Even though it always retained its status as a fruit of the true off-scene,¹² in a long-term perspective persons linked to it made quite a significant contribution to the emergence and advance of non-governmental organizations and initiatives in the last third of the decade (and later).¹³ Arkzin was discontinued precisely at that time, when its symbolic task of preparing the discourse and creating a theoretical and practical model for the future alternative scene had in a way been fulfilled. It was under its wing, or perhaps owing to its encouragement, that certain art projects, such as Gen XX by Sanja Ivezović,¹⁴ could take place. Sometimes it happened indirectly, as in the case of What, Who & for Whom, an exhibition accompanying Arkzin's new edition umjetnički projekti, primjerice Gen XX Sanje Ivezković,¹⁴ ili pak, posredno, izložba Tko, što i za koga, odgovor na Arkzinovo reizdanje Komunističkog manifesta 1998. godine, povodom 150. obljetnice njegova publiciranja. Urednici Arkzina, Vesna Janković i Dejan Kršić, uz nekolicinu suradnika, 1997. osnivaju ATTACK – Autonomous Culture Factory, nezavisnu udrugu koja je nastavila prnositi Arkzinovu ideološku misao i u šire polje kulturnog djelovanja, što je najavilo svojevrsni boom osnivanja relativno velikog broja umjetničkih i kulturnih udruga, kolektiva i organizacija u sljedećim godinama, neovisnih o većim službenim institucijama sličnog polja djelovanja, s namjerom što većeg širenja umjetnosti i kulture u područje javne sfere, artikuliranja i kritičkog referiranja na aktualne državno-političko-društvene strukture te – u krajnjoj liniji – stvaranja civilnog društva i novog javnog diskursa. Godina 1998. simbolički je obilježena kao ključna za nezavisnu kulturnu scenu, zbog nekolicine dogadaja. Umjetnik Igor Grubić u suradnji s ATTACK-om organizira niz akcija pod zajedničkim nazivom Knjiga i društvo – 22%, što je prvi događaj koji je okupio i aktivno uključio čitavu nezavisnu kulturnu scenu Zagreba. Povod projektu bilo je uvođenje poreza na knjige, a znakovito je da je PDV na knjige sljedeće godine ukinut. Činjenica da je dotad „nedodirljivi“ politički aparat, između ostaloga,¹⁵ pokleknuo pred udruženjem snagama kulturnih aktera i – šire – javnošću, djelovala je krajnje optimistično na ostatak desetljeća. Mnoga su individualna nastojanja pojedinih umjetnika rezultirala radovima koji su vrlo kritički i manje ili više eksplicitno doticali problem represije, državne kontrole i distribucije određenog sadržaja u masovnim medijima i javnom diskursu, primjerice rad Ivane Keser Zagađena voda, izveden na 33. Zagrebačkom salonu 1998. Umjetnica je na podu galerije izložila posude napunjene vodom i natopljenim stranicama dnevnih novina. Simbolički smrad stanja u koje je hrvatsku državu, društvo i kulturu dovela državna politika širo se jednako kao i stvari smrad raspadačućih novina. Iste je godine na 25. Salonu mladih, u okviru koncepcije Tihomira Milovca, u tu preglednu i obično neinventivnu likovnu manifestaciju uvršten niz nezavisnih udruga, između ostalih i ATTACK te Art radionica Lazareti, čime su vrlo brzo prepoznati važnost i dosezi tih i sličnih organizacija.

Da se nije radilo tek o izdvojenim događajima i akcijama na relativno skromnom polju kulture, nego o određenom kritičnom trenutku u kojem društvo napokon osvještava vlastitu etičku zadaću i preuzima odgovornu inicijativu za određene političke promjene (a kojemu su inicijative nezavisne kulturne scene prethodile i na neki način „otvorile prostor“), svjedoči i osnutak Građanske koalicije i organizacija kampanje Glas 99. Ciljevi navedene koalicije i njezine kampanje bili su „potaknuti što veći postotak građana Hrvatske da izadu na (...) parlamentarne izbore. (...) Drugi cilj bio je promicati vrijednosti civilnog društva of the Communist Manifesto in 1998, published on the occasion of its 150th anniversary. In 1997, the editors of Arkzin, Vesna Janković and Dejan Kršić, founded ATTACK – Autonomous Culture Factory together with some collaborators: an independent organization that transmitted Arkzin's ideological principles into a broader field of cultural activity, heralding a sort of boom of new artistic and cultural associations, collectives, and organizations in the years to come, which would be independent from the larger official institutions active in the same fields. Their intent was to spread art and culture into the public sphere, to articulate and critically refer to the current state, political, and social structures, and – eventually – build up a civil society and a new public discourse. The year of 1998 would prove symbolically “crucial” for the independent cultural scene owing to a number of events. In collaboration with ATTACK, artist Igor Grubić organized a series of happenings under the common title Book and the Society – 22%, the first event that joined the entire independent cultural scene of Zagreb in a common action. It was a reaction to the introduction of VAT on books, and it is important to note that the tax was abolished the following year. The fact that the hitherto “untouchable” political apparatus, among other things,¹⁵ ceded before the joint action of cultural agents and – more importantly – the public at large had a considerable optimistic impact on the rest of the decade. A number of efforts by individual artists resulted in artworks that were very critical and more or less explicitly tackled the problem of repression, state control, and topics selected for the mass media and public discourse. Among them, one should mention the installation called Polluted Water by Ivana Keser, exhibited at the 33th Zagreb Salon in 1998. The artist placed containers filled with water and soaked newspaper pages onto the gallery floor. The symbolic stench of the situation into which the state policy had brought Croatia was spreading together with the real stench of decaying newspaper. That same year, the 25th Youth Salon, that usually uninventive art manifestation of an overview type, was authored by Tihomir Milovac and included a number of independent organizations, among others ATTACK and Art Workshop Lazareti, which contributed to the prompt recognition of the importance and achievements of these and similar organizations.

The fact that these were not isolated events and actions in the relatively modest field of culture, but rather a specific critical moment in which the society was finally becoming aware of its own ethical task and starting a responsible initiative for political change (preceded by the initiatives of independent cultural scene, which in a way “opened up” the way), was confirmed by the founding of the Civic Coalition and the launching of its campaign called Voice 99. The aims of this coalition and its campaign were to “encourage the highest possible percentage of Croatian citizens to vote in parliamentary elections. (...) The second goal was to promote the values of the civil society and to endorse long-term interests of non-governmental organizations

i zagovarati dugoročne interese nevladinih organizacija kao institucija civilnog društva".¹⁶ Na važnost političkog, ideološkog i šireg ekonomskog konteksta i vladajućih društvenih uvjeta za proizvodnju i recepciju umjetnosti uputila je u velikoj mjeri već spomenuta izložba iz 2000. godine Što, kako i za koga, iz koje će se oformiti kustoski kolektiv WHW (What, How and For Whom) i u idućem desetljeću postati jednim od najznačajnijih participanata na lokalnoj kulturno-umjetničkoj sceni, ali i zadobiti svoju prepoznatljivost unutar šireg europskog konteksta. Izložba s podnaslovom „Povodom 152. godišnjice Komunističkog manifesta“ koincidirala je sa smjenom dotadašnje konzervativne desničarski orientirane vlasti. Mogućnost promjene, ostvarena tim primjerom smjene političkog vrha, urodila je i novim valom različitih oblika akcija, praksi i angažmana koji su uputili na važnost javnog govora o socijalnoj nepravdi, kršenju ljudskih prava, prodorima partikularnih interesa u javnu sferu i sl. Jedna od posljednjih takvih akcija prije ulaska u novo desetljeće i novo tisućljeće vezana je uz problem Studentskog centra, koji je HDZ-ova vlast u devedesetima potpuno okrnjila nizom politički provođenih odluka, dokidanjem i strogim kontroliranjem kulturnih i društvenih programa koji su se tu nemjerljivo slobodnije odvijali tijekom prethodna tri desetljeća. U siječnju 2000. otvara se izložba znakovitog naziva Novi početak u organizaciji ATTACK-a, u sklopu koje Igor Grubić dijeli letke s pozivom na smjenu Uprave SC-a.¹⁷

Izložba je okupila mlađu generaciju umjetnika, nezadovoljnih aktualnim uvjetima rada, ali s optimističnim prizvukom nadolazećih promjena.

Devedesete su godine razdoblje izrazito obilježeno definiranjem identiteta – nacionalnog, kulturnog, pa i umjetničkog. Na nacionalnoj razini konstruiraju se oštре opreke u odnosu na prethodnu državu (dapače, konstruira se i vrlo specifičan, antagonistički način govorenja o proteklom razdoblju, razdoblju jugoslavenske države), dok se na umjetničkoj sceni traže sličnosti i paralele s djelovanjem prethodnih generacija, dajući time legitimitet i umjetnicima šestog, sedmog, osmog i devetog desetljeća 20. st., a istovremeno i najmladim generacijama. Unutar vrlo pluralističke likovne produkcije u ovom su tekstu izdvojeni oni primjeri koji su, po mojem mišljenju, imali najveće dosege i utjecaj na iduće desetljeće, a objedinjeni u ovom kontekstu predstavljaju tek jednu moguću interpretaciju razdoblja. Radovi su to koji se vrlo angažirano odnose prema aktualnom trenutku, koji u zatvorenoj i ograničenoj sferi, unutar koje „javno“ kao opća dostupnost i opće dobro ne egzistira, otvaraju uvjete za mogućnost kritičkog mišljenja.

as civil society institutions."¹⁶ The importance of the political, ideological, and broader economic context and the prevailing social conditions for the production and reception of art was emphasized by the abovementioned exhibition What, How & for Whom in 2000, which resulted in the formation of the curatorial collective WHW, one of the most important participants in the local cultural and art scene in the following decade, which also gained recognition in the European context. Their exhibition subtitled "On the occasion of the 152nd anniversary of the Communist Manifesto" coincided with the change in government, which had hitherto been right-wing conservative. The awareness of the possibility of change, brought about by this change in political leadership, resulted in a new wave of various forms of actions, practices, and engagements that emphasized the importance of public discourse on social injustice, violation of human rights, intrusion of vested interests into the public sphere, and so on. One of the last such actions before the onset of the new decade and the new millennium was linked to the problem of Student Centre, which had been completely thwarted during the 1990s by HDZ's government with a series of politically enforced decisions, such as the abolishment or strict control of cultural and social programmes after they had been taking place there with considerably greater freedom than elsewhere in the previous three decades. In January 2000, an exhibition with the telling title New Beginnings was organized there by ATTACK, including the distribution of leaflets by Igor Grubić that called for a change in SC's administration.¹⁷ The exhibition featured a younger generation of artists, who were dissatisfied with the current working conditions, but with the optimistic undertones of oncoming change.

The 1990s were a period that was exceptionally strongly marked by identity definition – national, cultural, and even artistic. At the national level, one could observe sharp contrasts in relation to the previous state (including a very specific, antagonistic discourse on the past age, the era of Yugoslavia), while the art scene was searching for analogies and parallels to the activity of the previous generations, thus legitimizing the artists of the sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth decade of the 20th century, as well as the youngest generation. Within the very pluralistic art production, I have chosen to present those cases that, in my opinion, had the most far-reaching achievements and impact on the decade to follow, and the way they were brought together in this text is only one among many possible interpretations of the period. Those were the artworks that took a very engaged stance towards the current moment, and which in that closed and limited sphere, in which "the public" barely functioned as a generally accessible notion, while common good was practically non-existing, opened up new ways for the possibility of critical thinking.

¹ The expression "struggling for the context" has been taken over from an interview with Slaven Tolj, published in Homo Volans (Vijenac) on 2 October

² Izložba je otvorena 5. svibnja 1994. i rezultat je autorske koncepcije Mladen Stilinovića. Izložba je okupila „stare“ izlagače, umjetnike koji su tijekom osamdesetih, od osnivanja Galerije, pa sve do njezina zatvaranja 1991., redovito ondje izlagali. Tema - hrana i piće - bila je zadana, kao i namjerna intencija da se na taj način, egizstencijalnom potrebom za hranom i tekućinom, uputi i prikaže „trajna egzistencijska ugroženost umjetnika na domaćem tlu“ (u: Goran Blagus, „Mikrokozmos na pladnju“, u: Vijenac, god. II, 11, 26. svibnja 1994., 27.).

⁷ Prisjetimo se, središnja muzejska institucija, Muzej suvremene umjetnosti, sve do kraja prvog desetljeća 21. stoljeća, dakle još idućih šesnaest godina, djelovala je u sasvim neprilagodljivoj povijesnoj zgradbi na Katarinini trgu, bez prikladnih izlagачkih prostora i depoa. Isto tako, devedeset je obilježilo i zatvaranje nekolicine galerijskih prostora (Galerija PM, Galerija SC), dok su ostale institucije djelovale uz znatna ograničenja, djelomično gubeći ulogu koju su imale u kreiranju suvremene umjetničke scene u proteklim desetljećima.

Već je vrlo rano vrijednost ove skupine umjetnika prepoznata na internacionalnoj razini; video-spot s izrazito anti-ratnom porukom, „Croatia in Flame“, prikazivan je na MTV-u 1991.

¹⁴ Na Arkzinovim stranicama objavljeni su umjetničini „oglaši“, dio ciklusa Gen XX, koji je kritički propitivo više pitanja od medijskog oglašavanja, manipulacije sadržajem, subverzivnosti i cenzure pojedinih sadržaja, konstrukciju nacionalnog i povjesnog identiteta, pitanje copyrighta i sl.

¹⁵ Uvedeni porez na dodanu vrijednost od čak 22% bio je jedan od najviših u Europi i u godini dana njegova provođenja prodaja knjiga znatno je pala.

Gradanska koalicija osnovana je okupljanjem tridesetak nevladinih udruga 1999. godine kao reakcija na tek održane parlamentarne izbore, da bi se koaliciji, nakon provođenja kampanje Glas 99, pridružilo još gotovo 120 organizacija. O uspjehu te inicijative govoriti i činjenica o znatnom porastu broja birača izašlih na izbore u odnosu na ranije.

¹⁷ Borbu protiv čelnih ljudi SC-a nastavio je Pokret studentskih inicijativa organiziranjem potpisivanja peticije za njihovu smjenu.

1996. Quoted from: Tihomir Milovac, “5”, in: 25th Youth Salon, exhibition catalogue (Zagreb: HDLU, 1998), 257.

² The exhibition was authored by Mladen Stilinović and opened on May 5, 1994. It gathered its “old” exhibitors, artists who had been exhibiting there regularly during the 1980s, from the Gallery’s foundation until it closed down in 1991. The topic – food and drink – was defined in advance, with the intention of using the existential need of food and drink to indicate and show the “permanent existential threat that the artists are facing in their homeland” (from: Goran Blagus, „Mikrokozmos na pladnju“ [Microcosm on a Plate], Vijenac II/11 (26 May 1994), 27).

⁶ The planned exhibition catalogue was never printed, allegedly because of the modest budget. Some of the texts (by the following authors: Igor Zidić, Zdenko Rus, Mladenka Šolman, Tonko Maroević, Vlado Martek, Josip Stošić, Berislav Valušek, Vladimir Kusik, Feda Vukić, Mladen Stilinović, Marina Gržinić, Leonida Kovač, Nada Beroš, Miroslav Gašparović, Ljiljana Kolešnik, Darko Glavan, and Željko Kipke) were exhibited at the accompanying symposium, and then published in the Kolo magazine. Kolo 11–12 (1993), 962–1029.

⁹ Exhibitions such as Words and Images (1994), Checkpoint (1995), and so on.

¹² Dejan Kršić, the editor of Arkzin, once said: “Owing to certain subjectively objective and objectively subjective factors, the Arkzin project has really never resulted in a new mainstream publication or a firmly positioned magazine. But perhaps that was not our goal in the first place. Our primary goal has always been to keep open the possibilities of expression and reflection.” In: Agata Juniku and Sabina Sabolović, „Bebe i prljava voda“ [On babies and bathwater], Zarez I/21–22 (23 December 1999), 8.
