Oil was used as a solvent for the oil paint. The oil paint was applied to the surface of the panel with a brush or a palette knife. The oil paint was applied in thin layers, allowing each layer to dry before applying the next. This process was repeated until the desired thickness and texture were achieved. The oil paint was applied in a way that allowed it to penetrate the surface of the panel, creating a rich, velvety texture. The oil paint was also applied in a way that allowed it to blend with the underlying ground, creating a harmonious color palette. The oil paint was applied in a way that allowed it to react with the panel, creating a unique and organic finish.
