Original scientific paper is a full-length article reporting the results of original research and/or developing a new theory. The former contains as yet unpublished results of original research and a full description of methodology, data and interpretation, presented in accordance with the professional and scholarly standards. The latter contains a systematic critical overview including meta-analyses, and its originality depends on its focus, scope, and argumentation in relation to current theories.

Preliminary communication contains as yet unpublished preliminary results of original research in progress, or a theoretical formulation of the problem and a proposal for its solution, without the more extended theoretical development or detailed analysis characteristic of research articles.

Review article presents a concise survey of the current status and trends in a scholarly area, or with regard to a theoretical issue or a research topic.

Professional paper makes a valuable professional contribution to the field, which may include presenting new material (without a complete theoretical, methodological or analytical treatment), applying published research results in practice or disseminating them (for educational purposes), or presenting a concise critical review of a selected current issue. Professional papers should be written to be accessible to a broad audience and not only to specialists in the given subject.
