The Croatian Journal of Philosophy is a peer-reviewed academic journal grounded in the tradition of analytic philosophy. Established in 2001, the journal publishes original articles and critical discussions across all areas of philosophy, with a special emphasis on the philosophy of language and linguistics. It welcomes high-quality submissions from scholars around the world, fostering a vibrant international exchange of philosophical ideas. Additionally, it offers a spotlight to philosophical ideas developed within Croatia and the broader Central and Southeastern European context. The Croatian Journal of Philosophy is an open-access journal, ensuring that all published content is freely available to readers worldwide without subscription or payment barriers.