

Policy on Corrections and Denials of Published Article

Correction of data in the published article

The authors of the article are responsible for the accuracy of the published data in their article. Authors are expected to respond to editorial and reviewer comments in a professional and timely manner. If the author decides to withdraw a manuscript that has already been submitted to the review process or does not want to accept the reviewer's suggestions after the review process has been completed, he is obliged to inform the editor-in-chief as soon as possible.

All corrections in the paper must be made before publication of the issue, therefore the corresponding author receives the final version of publication shortly before the print, which must be reviewed and corrected within 48 hours.

If despite this and after publication the authors find a major error in the published article, they can submit a correction (erratum) to the editors, and it will be published online in the first next edition.

Withdrawal of published article

If, after the publication of the article, the authors notice an error that affects the reproducibility of the research and the accuracy of the results, then they report that error to the editors who, after a repeated review (and if they understand the author's doubts), will mark the online version of the article with the mark "retracted by the author". The link to the withdrawn paper will still be active, but the mark on the paper will clearly indicate that the paper has been withdrawn from the author's side.

If the editors, reviewers or readers after publication notice that the article (or part of the article) has already been published, that the data in the article has been falsified, or that the research was not conducted in accordance with ethical principles, the editorial board will consider the report and if it is determined that the authors have violated ethical principles they will withdraw the paper, and the paper will be marked with "retracted by the editor". The link to the withdrawn paper will still be active, but the mark on the paper will not clearly indicate that the paper has been withdrawn by the editor. Any procedure for withdrawing a published article is done in accordance with the COPE guidelines (<https://publicationethics.org/files/retraction-guidelines-cope.pdf>)
